FLAKEEFFECT

THE SEASON'S BIGGEST STORM IS GOING TO STICK AROUND AWHILE

Chicago Tribune

The storm that struck midmorning had socked the Chicago area with the season's biggest snowfall by Tuesday evening and was expected to drop another inch or two as it lingers through Wednesday, forecasters said.

The northern suburbs were hit hardest, with some areas reporting 6 to 7 inches of snow Tuesday night. Many city and suburban schools closed early and canceled sporting games and practices. By midevening, more than 400 departing flights had been canceled at O'Hare and Midway, with about 450 arrivals also canceled.

Cars and buses slid into ditches and crashed into each other on slick roads. The Illinois Tollway and Chicago's Streets and Sanitation department dispatched their full fleets of snowplows and salt trucks.

Snow fell at about 2 inches an hour in some northern suburbs. Any snow Wednesday or the rest of the week won't be nearly that intense, meteorologist Casey Sullivan of the National Weather Service said.

By 6 p.m. Tuesday, the official snowfall total was 3.8 inches at O'Hare, according to the weather service. That brought the official total for the season to 17.4 inches, and February's total to 13.9 inches.

CTA buses had a hard time navigating some roads Tuesday. A few buses got stuck near North Stockton Drive and West Dickens Avenue, police said.

"Obviously, we're advising operators to drive with caution," CTA spokeswoman Lambrini Luki-dis said.

With snow forecast to fall periodically Wednesday and Thursday, drivers should continue to heed that advice, Sullivan said. Even after the storm passes, there could be some more in store, with unrelated lake-effect snow possible Friday, he said. "We'll see."

AT LEAST 3 DEAD

The storm that hit Chicago on Tuesday left a trail of death and destruction in the Plains states.

A woman died and three passengers were injured Monday night on Interstate 70 when their pickup truck rolled off the icy roadway in Ellis County, Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback said. Earlier Monday, a man was killed when his car veered off the interstate in Sherman County near the Colorado border.

One person died in Woodward, Okla, when the roof of a home partially collapsed.

"We have roofs collapsing all over town," Mayor Roscoe Hill Jr. said. "We really have a mess on our hands," REUTERS

Even Detroit knows that Detroit sucks

Bolohan escottbolohan

If you've ever been to a game between Detroit and Chicago teams, you are familiar with the "Detroit sucks" chant Guys, we know. Detroit does suck. As a Detroit native, I can tell you that if there were a way to chant "We are very aware of our city's shortcomings and Chicago's superiority, although in sports we are often quite equally matched," we would, but up to this point we haven't figured out a way to make

So it was no surprise when Forbes last week named Detroit the most miserable city in the U.S., giving Chicagoans another bit of ammo to use against Detroiters. (Though it should be noted that Chicago came in fourth.) I have no problem admitting Chicago is better than Detroit in every conceivable way other than music. You win.

Now, can we get a little sympathy? Do you have any idea what it's like being from Detroit? When people say terrible things about where you're from, you can't even pretend they're not true. You can only provide them with more upto-date violent crime and bankruptcy data. At least in Cleveland they can say, "uh, the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame?" We have nothing.

I can't say anything bad about my Detroit upbringing. It probably wasn't too different from yours or anyone else's, other than perhaps an irrational amount of love for Bob Seger. It wasn't my choice to grow up there, which is why I bolted from Detroit to Chicago as soon as I could. Don't get me wrong-I love Detroit. It's a part of me (the miserable part), and it will always be home no matter where

But Detroiters are like third-world refugees trying to escape to a better life (no disrespect to third-world refugees). I always felt looked down upon by Chicagoans. As soon as the inevitable "where are you from?" question is asked, we expect the snarky remarks.

Well, it's time for this Detroit/Chicago hostility to end. After all, half of you reading this are from Detroit and the other half are from Hoffman Estates.

Detroiters talk about restoring our city to what it once was, but secretly we want to make it into a version of Chicago. And frankly, that's just not going to happen. We're jealous. We see what you have: skyscrapers with actual people in them, public transit (seriously, we're even jealous of the CTA, considering our train is an unmagical version of the Disney World monorail), and pizza with enough cheese to humble Prince Fielder. We want that.

And yet we're not so different. It's not hard to see how Chicago could become Detroit if violence keeps escalating and Chicago's main export (cholesterol?) completely collapses on itself. And arguably, we have more in common with Chicago than Chicago does with New York or L.A.

We should embrace our shared Midwestness. There's a kindness in us you don't find in others around the country, and at the same time a toughness that comes from waiting outside for a bus for 45 minutes because it'll be there in five minutes 30 minutes ago. We say "pop." And we'll both always have Bob Probert.

But above all, we can bond over how much Ohio sucks.

SCOTT BOLOHAN IS A REDEVE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

WHEN SOCIAL MEDIA GETS UGLY ...

Every once in awhile, a story comes along to remind us of the unbelievably dark side of social media, the parts of social media where people tweet nasty slurs to each other-and where Facebook users try to scam victims of-and those sympathetic to-a mass tragedy.

According to Reuters, three Connecticut lawmakers have urged Facebook to remove fraudulent and abusive tribute pages related to the mass shooting at Sandy Hook Elementary School. The senators wrote a joint letter to Facebook Chief Executive Mark Zuckerberg. pressing the company to remove pages that "violate the privacy of families as they grieve, or seek financial gain through soliciting donations under false pretenses, or generating Facebook 'likes' for marketing purposes."

For these developers, the Yellow Brick Road leads straight to Chicago

By Ryan Smith

FOR REDEYE

It's not exactly the Yellow Brick Road, but a proverbial hop, skip and a jump up the Kennedy Expressway from the wizard of Oz's birthplace lies the origin of a new kind of Oz creation.

More than a century after L. Frank Baum penned "The Wonderful Wizard of Oz" in his Humboldt Park home, a Chicago-based tech start-up called Spooky Cool Labs has created a licensed city-building Facebook game called "The Wizard of Oz," based on the adventures of Dorothy, the Scarecrow, the Cowardly Lion and the rest of Baum's weird, wonderful creations.

It's impeccable timing for Spooky Cool Labs, because Oz is likely to be a hot commodity this year. A prequel to "The Wizard of Oz," titled "Oz: The Great and Powerful," hits theaters March 8. The big-budget animated film "Dorothy of Oz" is set to follow later in 2013. The original 1939 movie starring Judy Garland also is getting a 3-D conversion for its 75th anniversary restoration on Blu-ray sometime in the fall.

It's safe to think Spooky Cool Labs clicked its heels together and wished the deal with Warner Bros. to happen, but chief creative officer Brian Eddy said there was some foresight involved.

"We'd actually been thinking about it before, but once we talked to WB [and] they told us some of the things they had planned, we got more excited," Eddy said. "There's sort of a renaissance of 'The Wizard of Oz' going on right now."

And Chicago's historical ties with Oz?

"Well, that's pretty much a coincidence," Eddy said.

The timing of the deal amused the company's marketing director, Bob Holtzman, who already owned a small terrier bred in Kansas he named Oz, who resembles Toto. "It was like a match made in heaven," he said.

Once Spooky Cool Labs obtained the license for Oz, the small developer spent most of two years creating a social city-builder game for Facebook in the style of Zynga's popular "Farmville" or EA's "Sim City Social," but with a "Wizard of Oz" touch. The fully 3-D virtual world puts players into Dorothy's ruby slippers just after her house is whisked away from Kansas and lands on the Wicked Witch of the West.

But in this version of Oz, the Yellow Brick Road hasn't been laid yet, meaning you can't immediately take a jaunty stroll to see the wizard.

The goal, then, is to build a city for the tiny denizens of Munchkinland so they eventually will be up to the mighty task of forming the road.

"The Wizard of Oz" game is the first project for Spooky Cool Labs, a startup created in January 2011 and led by CEO Joe Kaminkow and chairman Larry DeMar—two Chicago tech pioneers who first made their names in the arcade, pinball and slot machine world. They helped create the classic arcade video game "Defender" and later founded Data East Pinball, now known as Stern Pinball—one of just two companies in the U.S. currently making new pinball machines. After spending time creating popular slot machines like "Wheel of Fortune," they decided to try something different.

"We were looking at the vast quantity of players on Facebook, and as game designers we hadn't had the opportunity to approach so many players at one time in this massive space," Kaminkow said. "For someone who was used to getting people to play one quarter at a time, it was kind of mindblowing."

Since the game went live on Halloween it has amassed 1.1 million players, but work for Spooky Cool Labs is far from finished. They currently are creating expansion packs, mini-games and additional features to keep players coming back.

Kaminkow is hesitant to call the game a huge success, but says he's proud of all the hard work. "We didn't want a generic game that wouldn't get noticed. And we felt like everything about 'The Wizard of Oz' is iconic and American. In the end, if you're going to build a city, wouldn't you rather build an Emerald one?"

RYAN SWITH IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR

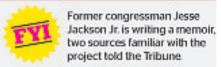

A newly restored, 3-D version of the original 1939 Judy Garland film "The Wizard of Oz" will be out on Blu-ray in the fall to celebrate its 75th anniversary.

Baby gorilla recovering from serious facial injury at Lincoln Park Zoo

Chicago Tribune

A baby gorilla born at Lincoln Park Zoo last fall is recovering from a serious facial injury she suffered last week that may have been inflicted by another gorilla.

Zoo staff discovered Wednesday that Nayembi, born Nov. 16 to mother Rollie, had been injured, according to a zoo spokeswoman. Animal care staff immediately separated the infant and Rollie from the rest of the gorilla group, which includes her father, Kwan, also the father of baby gorilla Patty, born at the zoo in October, according to a blog post by Lincoln Park Zoo President Kevin Bell.

Nayembi underwent surgery soon after her injury was discovered, and now is being treated at the zoo's animal hospital.

"Her recovery isn't a certainty-we find few certainties with such fragile infants, nearly a quarter of whom don't make it through their first year of life," Bell said in his blog post. "But she's playing throughout the day and getting plenty of sleep, just like an infant should. These are good signs."

The zoo has stepped up monitoring of the gorilla troop, which includes a total of eight gorillas, including the two infants, according to Bell.

"It's been a difficult few days, filled with worry for everyone at the zoo," but plans to respond to an injury among the gorillas were followed well, and helped get Nayembi the care she needed quickly, Bell said in the blog

Gay marriage clears House committee

Chicago Tribune

SPRINGFIELD A bill legalizing gav marriage cleared a Democratic-led committee late Tuesday and now moves to the full House, where the issue is expected to meet its toughest test.

The proposal, approved on a 6-5 vote in the House Executive Committee, is coming under increasingly heavy fire from church organizations who say same-sex marriage violates moral and religious principles.

But advocates have ratcheted up calls for swift action.

Sponsoring Rep. Greg Harris (D-Chicago) said the bill is needed "because we need to treat all Illinois families equally under the law" but the status of people in civil unions is often misunderstood.

Under the measure, marriage in Illinois would be allowed between two people rather than only a man and a woman. Democratic Gov. Quinn has vowed to sign the legislation, a move that would make Illinois the 11th state in the nation to allow same-sex marriage.

The Senate passed the legislation with only one Republican vote on Valentine's Day.

Rodman goes to N. Korea

Rodman

SEOUL, South Korea Hall of Fame Bulls star Dennis Rodman arrived in North Korea on Tuesday to film a TV documentary with representatives of the Harlem Globetrotters, North Korean state TV reported.

Rodman, 51, won five NBA championships in his prime, achieving a mix of fame and notoriety for his on- and off-court antics, including a brief marriage to Carmen Electra and an affair with Madonna. He also had agreed last year to coach a topless women's basketball team in New York.

Rodman spent three years on the Bulls, from 1995-98, winning three NBA titles. He was inducted into the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame in 2011.

In his post-NBA career, Rodman, nicknamed "The Worm," appeared on several reality shows, including "Celebrity Mole," "Celebrity Apprentice" and "Celebrity Big Brother."

North Korean leader Kim Jong-un, who has launched two long-range rockets and carried out a nuclear weapons test during just over a year in power, is reported to be an avid NBA fan and had pictures taken with players from the Bulls and L.A. Lakers during his school days in Switzerland.

SPORTS DIPLOMACY

There has been a variety of attempts at sports diplomacy with North Korea, ranging from wrestling to judo and basketball. None appears to have fared any better than the regular kind of diplomacy in preventing North Korea from pushing toward the acquisition of nuclear weapons.

New York-based TV production company Vice. Vice, which has previously worked in North Korea, said the weeklong trip would include running a basketball camp for North Korean children.

The company hinted that Kim may attend one of its events, but that could not be independently verified.

Budget cut fight down to the wire

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. President Obama took his case for softening the effect of deep budget cuts to a shipyard town dependent on defense contracting Tuesday, but there was little sign he will be able to halt the cuts.

"These cuts are wrong. They are not smart, they're not fair. They are a self-inflicted wound that doesn't have to happen," he told workers.

It was the latest event staged by the White House to warn of the possible damage to public services-from less child care to air travel chaos-from the $85 billion across-the-board budget cuts that are due to begin Friday. An agreement in Congress would halt the cuts, but with days to go before the ax starts to fall, the two parties do not agree on what to replace them with.

House Speaker John Boehner (R-Ohio) accused Obama of using "our military men and women as a prop in yet another campaign rally to support his tax hikes."

That was on Wall Street last year, about a 9 percent hike over the previous year, according to a report released Tuesday by New York state Comptroller Thomas DiNapoli.

A Mirror Ball trophy would be the perfect compliment to three Olympic medals. And that could happen, because gymnast Aly Raisman, 18, who won three medals (two golds, one silver) at the 2012 Olympics, will compete on "Dancing with the Stars" this Raisman, former figure skating champion Dorothy Hamill, boxer Victor Ortiz and NFL star Jacoby Jones all will compete this season on the show, which starts March 18.

Athletes have a history of dominating this competition. Here are the odds that these four will reign supreme on "DWTS."

LOS ANGELES TIMES CONTRIBUTED TO THIS REPORT.

Jacoby Jones

Age: 28 Footsteps: Jerry Rice (2nd), Emmitt Smith (1st), Jason Taylor (2nd), Warren Sapp (2nd), Lawrence Taylor (7th), Michael Irvin (2nd), Chad Ochocinco (4th), Kurt Warner (5th), Hines Ward (1st), Donald Driver (1st) Outlook: NFL wide receivers have fared spectacularly, perhaps because of that position's diva mentality and their talent for selling themselves. But spending time around Baltimore teammate Ray Lewis' dance, with its jolting "rhythm," hurts him. Odds: 3-1

Dorothy Hamill

Footsteps: Kristi Yamaguchi (1st), Evan Lysacek (2nd) Outlook: She's got the America's sweetheart vibe go-

Victor Ortiz

Aly Raisman

Odds: 5-1

Footsteps: Shawn Johnson (1st)

Outlook: Size matters: Raisman benefits from being easy for her partner to pick up. She probably could do a triple-twisting somersault over him, too. Let's see the others try that.

Age: 26 Footsteps: Evander Holyfield (5th), Laila Ali (3rd), Floyd Mayweather Jr. (9th), Sugar Ray Leonard (9th) Outlook: Ouch. Boxers have a tough time on "DWTS." If Ortiz is going to spring an upset, he'll need more "float like a butterfly" and less "sting like a bee." Odds: 20-1

Underwear's moment of shining glory

Johnson

I remember the good old days when we regular humans didn't particularly care how fast or strong or quick or jumpy everybody was. Technically those days still are here for most of us, but that's not going to stop the NFL from treating the scouting combine like a TV-worthy event.

Not that I'm not grateful. It's wonderful to know exactly bow large another man's hands are, in case I'm ever curious.

Have you seen the coverage of this thing? Every year before the draft, would-be profootball players congregate in Indianapolis to prove they possess the physical tools to play in the NFL. They strip down to Lycra underwear to be weighed and measured to the millionth of an inch, then race around obstacles of various distance, height and heaviness.

It bothers me. Setting aside whatever personal aesthetic issues I might have with an impromptu parade of the male form (it's not for me but I'm not panicking about it), it's a little weird that NFL teams insist on the underwear. I mean, I get it, but it seems a little like the judgment portion of a chattel auction. I keep expecting reports on dental strength along with the breathless reporting on tight end vertical leaps. Regardless of how excited I'd be as a fan if the Bears drafted a tight end who could leap 12 feet in the air, the whole aesthetic of the combine weirds me out.

You know what else bothers me about it? In the middle of the controversy surrounding concussions, there's a plausible question as to whether this game can be played safely. And if the answer is no, then what we're measuring with gleeful exactitude is how much damage a human can inflict on another person.

Millions of dollars are at stake for each athlete. Those are the rewards given for stripping down to your skivvies and proving how capable you are at crushing another man's skull. I guess that's football, but I miss the days when I didn't have to know about it to within a quarter of an inch.

No rest for Castro

Cubs star can't forget last season soon enough

By Matt Lindner

FORREDEYE

Like most Cubs fans, Starlin Castro is eager to put last year behind him.

"It's a new season," the face of the franchise said when asked about 2013, "I'm excited. I feel pretty good."

After the way 2012 ended, it would be hard to fault Castro for wanting to get away for a

The team had just lost 100 games for the first time in nearly 50 years and he had just signed a seven-year, $60 million contract months earlier.

And while that would be enough to have most guys packing their bags for a relaxing vacation the moment the season ended, Castro took a different approach.

"No, I worked myself," he said. "I work on everything, I work my defense, I work my hitting, I work everything. I want to be part of the team and win a lot more games this season."

> Truth be told, Castro knows last season didn't live up to fans' expectations. The soft-spoken shortstop said it didn't live up to his, either.

"I know that last season was kind of a little tough because I didn't hit .300," he said. "Everybody wants me to hit .300." That didn't stop Cubs fans from giving him a reaction befitting a Beatle at the Cubs Convention last month.

Throngs of die-hards surrounded Castro's autograph session and followed him wherever he went.

"The people love me, the people want me in this city," he said.

Unlike some of his teammates, Castro won't play in the upcoming World Baseball Classic. While the Cubs continue spring training in Arizona, he's working on improving on the career highs he set in 2012, in home runs (14), RBIs (78) and stolen bases (25).

While his teammate Alfonso Soriano hasn't been feeling much love from Cubs fans lately, he's got Castro's undying affection. No doubt he'd be disappointed if Soriano were traded to the N.Y. Yankees, which is the latest rumor floating around Major League Baseball.

"Thank God that he's still here," he said.

Soriano was nearly traded to San Francisco last summer, ultimately exercising his rights to reject the deal and remain a Cub despite the fact the team was mired in a miserable season. The Giants went on to win the World Series.

Castro credits the veteran outfielder for helping him make strides on and off the field.

"It's an unbelievable impact," Castro said. "It's not only the part about the plays, it's the part about the personality too. He's one of the great guys on the team."

MATT LINDNER IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Seeing red?

Hating the Detroit Red Wings might become a less frequent affair for Blackhawks fans. According to ESPN, the league is considering realignment that will shift the Wings to the Eastern conference, meaning they'd play the Hawks less often. Isn't that like putting the Packers in a different division than the Bears?

THE MOUTHWASH Last time I checked, whether it's Christianity or Muslims or other religions that are out there, they're just not going to accept it."

-Former Bears quarterback Jim Miller, to WSCR-AM 670, on whether an openly gay player would be welcome in an NFL locker room

Gaslight Anthem

Friday at Riviera Theatre

When frontman Brian Fallon sings, "Are you scared this sounds familiar?" on "Too Much Blood," it's a safe bet many Springsteen fans would respond with a resounding, "Yes." But the Jersey rockers overcome these similarities through sheer force of will.

Major Lazer

Saturday at Congress Theater With Major Lazer, Philadelphia producer/electronic musician Diplo creates globe-trotting beats that nod to everything from dancehall to reggae to hip-hop and beyond.

The Delta Saints

Saturday at Reggie's Music Joint The Nashville quintet professes a fondness for "women, whiskey and woes" on its Facebook page. Fittingly, the throwback Americana crew delivers songs about all three in equal measure.

25 can't-miss concerts as winter turns to spring

By Andy Downing | FOR REDEYE

Chicago's concert scene, which slows to a crawl in those freezing winter months, roars back to life in March with arena concerts from a smattering of big-name pop stars (Rihanna, Pink) and rockers (Muse, Green Day). Here are the 25 best shows the month has to offer.

ANDY DOWNING IS A REDEVE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. @REDEVECHIMUSIC

Night Beds

Saturday at Empty Bottle Winston Yellen, the singer-songwriter behind this newborn Nashville collective, fills the band's debut with weary, folk-leaning gems, making "Country Sleep" a surprisingly apt choice for its title.

Muse

Monday at United Center
The sci-fi obsessed British rockers embrace a bigger-isbetter philosophy on "The 2nd Law," kicking the album off with a massive tune, "Supremacy," whose title hints at the band's global ambitions.

Aesop Rock Monday at Metro

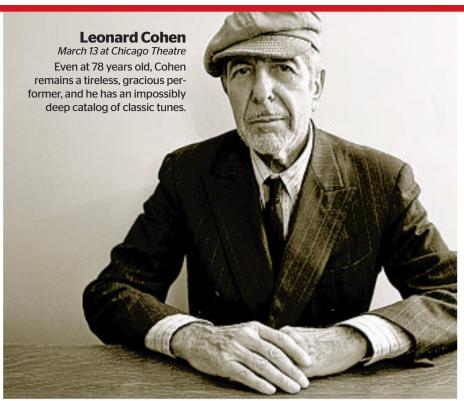

This New York-born rapper crafts songs so dense and verbose that he could bankrupt the Metro if he opted to charge by the word.

Imagine Dragons

Monday and Tuesday at House of Blues On Imagine Dragons' debut album, "Night Visions," the Vegas rockers flash arena ambition in line with hometown idols the Killers.

Tame Impala March 6 at the Vic

On "Lonerism," one of 2012's best albums, Kevin Parker balances his sad-bastard lyrics with wobbly, electro-inspired beats that are almost universally sunny.

Unknown Mortal Orchestra

March 7 at Lincoln Hall The band fills its sophomore fulllength, "II," with psychedelic, "Nuggets"inspired rockers that sometimes come on like alien transmissions.

French Montana

March 8 at Bottom Lounge On his mixtape "Mac and Cheese 3." the rapper comes across like a hip-hop chameleon, adapting his flow and delivery to accommodate a wide range of musical styles and guest MCs.

Jeff Tweedy March 13 and 14 at the Vic

No matter the venue size, the Wilco frontman's solo shows tend to feel like living room concerts, combining casual pacing and audience requests with Tweedy's dry, sharp sense of humor.

Django Django March 15 at Metro

The London quartet arrives in town to support its selftitled 2012 debut. which finds the band navigating genres as far flung as folk and acid-rock.

Local Natives March 21 at the Vic

The L.A. group recruited Aaron Dessner of the National to produce their sophomore album, "Hummingbird," a stunning effort hat balances the band's melodic California roots with an emerging dark side.

Rihanna March 22 at United Center Regardless of how album, major label debut "Pedestrian Verse."

fans view her offstage decisions (Chris Brown, cough), the Barbados-born pop star undoubtedly has evolved into a compelling live

Frightened Rabbit

March 23 at Riviera Theatre The jittery Scottish rockers arrive here in support of their fourth full-length studio

The Orwells March 23 at performer.

Beat Kitchen

These up-and-coming Chicago rockers' songs generally are brash and snotty, focused on little more than the troubles that crop up in their dayto-day lives.

Kim Gordon with White/ Light

March 26 at the Museum of Contemporary Art Local sound-based artists Matt Clark and Jeremy Lemos of White/Light are joined for this installation by Kim Gordon, making them the latest Chicago group to recruit a member of Sonic Youth.

Lee Fields and the Expressions

The pop-punk trio, which is gearing up to return to the stage following frontman Billie Joe Armstrong's extended stay in rehab, somehow balances a perpetual immaturity with an ever-increasing sense of ambition.

March 28 at Lincoln Square

Don't dare refer to this rugged R&B/ funk crew as retro soul, since Fields is a true original who has remained a steady presence on the music scene since cutting his first 45 in 1969.

Green Day

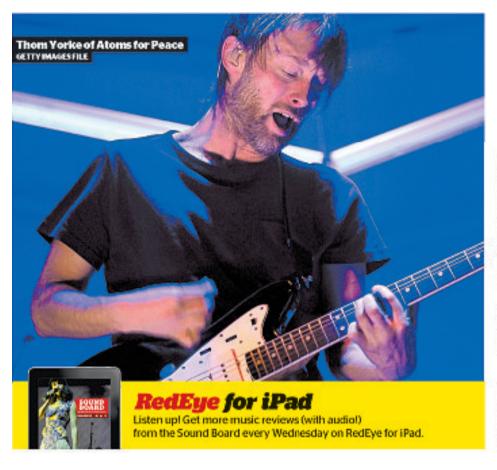

March 28 at Allstate Arena

Alt-J

March 28 at Metro The London-based indie-rock quartet captured the 2012 Mercury Prize for its debut album "An Awesome Wave."

AMOK Atoms for Peace

By Kyle Kramer

Radiohead's Thom Yorke always has explored quiet mental spaces, so your instinct when listening to his music might be to turn down the volume.
The swelling guitars, swirling vocals and sweeping washes of sound that characterize Radiohead can feel too pretty to exist in anything but crystalline miniature. Or are you the one person that really blasts "Kid A"?

It's possible to listen to "AMOK," Yorke's side project/sort-of solo effort that enlists the help of Radiohead producer Nigel Godrich and Red Hot Chili Peppers bassist Flea, among others, this way. Yet the album deserves to be played loudly, in a place where its constant, heavy basslines can be fully appreciated. The individual clattering rhythms that flit over said basslines—which might pass for minimalist Neptunes beats or Aphex Twin songs in isolation—should be fully absorbed as part of the landscape they form when piled together. Songs like the muscular "Dropped" and frenetic closer "Amok" ask to be treated as overwhelming and explosive.

Played quietly, the electronic production/live instrumentation blend of "AMOK" might suggest some lost link between "In Rainbows" and "King of Limbs." At times the album can resemble that band's recent, occasionally indulgent noodling. But turned up, its low end is smothering in the best way.

While it's clear we're in familiar headspace, particularly on tracks such as the restless, keening "Ingenue," here it becomes a place that is as pulsing and vibrant as it is confused and delicate.

ALBUM REVIEW

Mowali Mister Lies

By Kyle Kramer

REDEYE SOUND BOARD Chicago's dance music scene, whether in its original house setting or more recent electro incarnations, is distinctly urban: boisterous, cluttered but regimented, social. Columbia College student Nick Zanca.

a.k.a. Mister Lies, is not originally from Chicago. Physically he's from New England; generationally he's from the post-geography of the Internet. His influences are Portishead and Burial, not Cajmere and Frankie Knuckles. His setting for recording much of his debut album, "Mowgli," was a cabin in Vermont.

His music, accordingly, is pastoral, as much as that can be said about something electronic. It's not shy about the idea, either: Vocal interlude "Canaan" delivers a monologue (a sample or an imitation of one?) about the "tamed country aesthetic in which he sought solace," and the album ends with a sample of a CTA intercom for the "Blue Line train to O'Hare," a sort of ceremonial re-immersion in the city. But if the ideas can sometimes come across a bit simplistic-some of the tracks spend far too long in one strippeddown groove-the timing is impeccable.

"Mowgli" feels engineered for this latewinter season, its spare notes and drifting spaces forming the perfect soundtrack for padding through quiet, wide-open snow drifts. The intermittent plinks of opener "Ashore" are like icicles melting under a weak sun, until the track explodes in an excited swell of blown-out bass. "Trustfall" grows serenely, like budding tree leaves, while "Align" and "Ludlow" roam through what feels like an empty outdoors.

The influences sometimes are clear, but there are worse fates that sounding a little too much like Radiohead, Burial and Toro Y Moi. Mister Lies clearly is still growing as an artist, but the feeling of austere beauty is already there, like the first tentative blooms of spring.

Lagunitas set for summer opening

By Kate Bernot

REDEYE

Chicago craft beer fans who follow Lagunitas founder Tony Magee's Twitter (@LagunitasT) have had a pretty clear view of the back-andforth between the brewery and the city.

Since announcing plans in April to open a tap room and production brewery in Chicago, Lagunitas has been working with the city to ensure that the Douglas Park facility, a former steel distribution warehouse, would be up to

As Magee found out, morphing the 1970s building into a sleek and safe brewery was going to take some work.

"Building anything is like a form of war. You make the best possible plan, then tear it up once the real fighting begins ..." Magee tweeted Feb. 18.

But now that he's resolved fire code issues, mostly having to do with sprinklers, Magee expects to have the tap room open by June, with the brewery fully operational by Octo-

And as for his relationship with the city? There were never any hard feelings.

"It was the good kind of back-and-forth," Magee said. "In the past few months, there's been a number of high-profile fires in the city. That raises a lot of attention."

With all systems go, Magee and his team look forward to the tap room's summer opening. The pub will be located in the center of the massive warehouse, which has ceilings that rise to more than 50 feet, and its windows will offer views of the brewing process that will begin there in the fall.

An Arlington Heights, Ill., native who later moved to California, Magee is enthusiastic about his return to the Midwest. And yes, even his tweets are more upbeat these days.

Director Erica Weiss isn't scared to admit her new play freaks her out

By Julia Borcherts

FOR REDEYE "Believe it or not. the play terrifies me," director Erica Weiss said. "It's the furthest out of my comfort zone I could have stretched,"

She's referring to

"Vigils," the whimsical dramedy by Detroit playwright Noah Haidle that she's directing for The Gift Theatre, opening Thursday. It's about a young widow who struggles with memories of her firefighter husband when the opportunity for new love arrives.

Weiss arrived in Chicago from Denver in 2001 to study theater at DePaul. Upon graduation, she founded the former Hypatia Theatre Company and now is the associate artistic director of Route 66 Theatre Company, where she co-created and directed the 2011 hit production, "A Twist of Water," which then moved off-Broadway. We called Weiss during tech rehearsals to find out more about her collaboration with The Gift on "Vigils."

If the play terrifies you, what led you to accept the challenge of directing it?

What really attracted me there was the opportunity to do something that I never would have picked up and said, "This is a project for me." The work that I have been doing has been much more realistic, much more grounded storytelling, and "Vigils" is a little bit poetic, a little bit whimsical and has a lot of aspects of memory and fantasy elements ... that I just haven't played with. But can I take what I know I do well and my ability to listen to a play ... and really stretch myself with this show? We've always got to be on stage telling a story and living a kind of truth no matter how magical the story gets, no matter how many mystical or dream-like or memory-like places it goes—we have to keep it grounded somehow. And I think that's what The Gift does and that's what I do.

How did you come to be associated with

I have been a longtime admirer of The Gift and a huge fan of [co-founder] Michael Patrick Thornton. ... I'd pitched him a project and Mike ... said, "Can't do that show. But I have this other show; I think it's really beautiful. Will you direct it?" And I said yes because I'd been wanting to work with The Gift for a long time and it's a really unique opportunity to get offered a show that you didn't necessarily bring to the table.

What was a turning point for you as a theater professional?

The production of "A Twist of Water" that thing I've seen all year. I'm really excited to see the Garage Rep shows at Steppenwolf. And I'm really excited to see "Julius Caesar" at Chicago Shakes[peare], where I worked

I'm working with Bailiwick, directing the nardo—he's an ensemble playwright there in the summer at Stage 773. It's a comedythe dialogue is even in Tagalog. And I have zero frame of reference because I have no Filipino family and no background in the culture. In order to get it to translate to a wider audience, you need to make sure that you're being as specific as possible and honoring it correctly, but making sure that the storytelling is always working in a way that can be universal. I think that's what I'm there to do. JULIA BORCHERTS IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Route 66 Theatre did in 2011. There's a real a couple times. It's on a completely differbefore and after in my career picture—that ent scale, but it looks like one of the most was the first time I directed an Equity show extraordinary uses of space that they've ever and it was the first time that my longtime collaborator and I had gotten the chance to really showcase our work in a fairly high-What's next for you? profile way. They took a big chance on us, a world premiere of "Mahal," by Danny Berbig leap of faith. ... ["A Twist of Water"] took me all the way to my New York debut when we transferred it off-Broadway. I couldn't say drama about a Filipino family and some of enough about how much one opportunity to do one show can really change your life. What other Chicago plays do you recommend? I just saw "The Aliens" at A Red Orchid Theatre and that is far and away my favorite

'Psych' going strong in Season 7

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

"Psych" fans who have waited almost a year for Season 7 will be duly rewarded Wednesday night with the first of three funny, creative episodes I've had the chance to watch.

For those of you who aren't already fans, "Psych" follows the hilarious exploits of fake psychic Shawn Spencer (James Roday, from far right) and his pal, Burton "Gus" Guster (Dule Hill), who do investigative work for the Santa Barbara Police Department. Det. Carlton Lassiter (Timothy Omundson), whom they call Lassie, can't stand the pair. Shawn's girlfriend, Det. Juliet O'Hara (Maggie Lawson), often finds herself trying to get them out of trouble with Lassie and her boss, Karen Vick (Kirsten Nelson).

In "Santabarbaratown 2, Lethal Weapon 5," we finally learn the fate of Shawn's formercop father, Henry (Corbin Bernsen), who was shot at the end of last season. The episode features some "Psych" favorites:

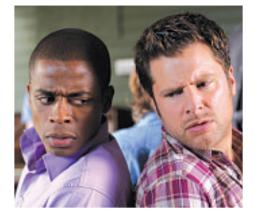

Psvch

9 p.m. Wednesday, USA

- » Coroner Woody (Kurt Fuller) keeps popping up with body bags.
- » Shawn hasn't stopped coming up with pseudonyms for himself and Gus. "Satchel Gizmo" and "Soupcan Flynn" sneak into a rifle range wearing the worst disguises.
- » Shawn crashes Gus' beloved blue Echo, which he calls "The Blueberry," so Gus gets a loaner he names "The Cranberry." Yes, it's red.

Those are just a few examples of the first episode's gags - and it's not even the best of the three I've seen. I would rank it "good," while the March 6 episode "Juliet Takes a Luvvah" would be "better" and the March 13 episode, "Lassie Jerky," would be "best." That episode, guest starring the WWE's Big Show, spoofs "found-footage" movies such as "Paranormal Activity" and "The Blair Witch Project" and probably is one of the best of the series.

It's hilarious and does what "Psych" does best by lovingly sending up a pop-culture touchstone and using the expert comedy chops of all of its cast members in whipsmart ways. Look for the show to pay homage to the film "Clue" later in the season. Featuring actors Christopher Lloyd, Lesley Ann Warren and Martin Mull from the 1985 film, it is the show's 100th episode.

It's a wonder that this far along in its run. "Psych" still finds new and wonderful ways to amuse and delight fans.

THREE TO PLAY

BY RYAN SMITH I FOR REDEYE

Tomb Raider

Xbox 360. PlayStation After hitting a creative dead end years ago, the "Tomb Raider" franchise has gotten a high-concept reboot that tells British archaeologist Lara Croft's origin story. Gone is the cold, self-assured adventurer equipped with dual pistols and a DD cup size, as embodied by Angelina Jolie In two big-budget movies. This tale stars a younger, more vulnerable Lara (voiced by "Grey's Anatomy" actress Camilla Luddington) on her first big expedition to explore a strange island that's hiding some dark secrets. The new "Tomb Raider" rushes a bit to Lara's transformation as a character, and doesn't do anything particularly new, but it borrows elements of the "Uncharted" and "Far Cry" series, throws in some of the mythos of the TV show "Lost," and blends it together into a polished, entertaining package. This is a series suddenly worth raiding again.

Star Wars Pinball Xbox 360. PlayStation 3, PC, IOS,

Google Play

Pinball purists may scoff at trying to recreate the real-world pinball experience in a video game-but you'd have to be a Darth Vader-level hater to get zero pleasure from these three "Star Wars'-themed tables. The first pack includes "The Empire Strikes Back," "The Clone Wars," and "Boba Fett." Most of the colorful action feels grounded in the physics of hitting an actual silver ball, but because it's a video game, you get extra flourishes like a figurine of everyone's favorite bounty hunter letpacking across the screen or a glowing lightsaber tossing the ball towards your flippers. May the Force (of gravity) be with you!

Crysis 3 PlayStation 3, Xbox 360, PC

Catch your breath after experiencing the hauntingly beautiful visuals of "Crysis 3," and underneath the glossy surface you'll discover a solidif-unspectacular shooter. You play as Prophet, a former Marine turned into an alien/human hybrid after suiting up in a DNA-swapping Nanosuit so he can battle creatures called the Ceph and keep them from destroying Earth. The story is rather dopey, but it's fun to traverse the (literal) urban jungle of a post-apocalyptic New York City and dispatch enemies with a series of tricked-out weapons and your stealthy bow and cloaking device. Best of all is the multiplayer mode "Hunters," which repurposes the standard death match into a thrilling video game version of the "Predator" movies. BYAN SMITH IS A REDEVE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR

BACKUP VOCALS/ GUITAR

Maya's a plum choice for this spot: she's already got her own Prince cover band, Princess (and was in the amazing "SNL" girl group Gemini's Twin). This clash of talented singers also could lead to some pretty juicy drama within the group-but they're probably just playing it up to get their own episode of VH-Ts "Behind the Music."

SAOIRSE RONAN

GUITAR

There are plenty of rock stars who have to change their names to something fantastic, but Saoirse has got that situation totally covered. She'd even sing her own songs for the band, which will sound AWESOME in her Irish accent.

BASS

Because ScarJo really just needs someone to thrash around behind her and make amazing faces while she's singing. Rebel also would be in charge of driving the tour van, which we suspect would result in a lot of flying around corners on two wheels

Selena's got a spicy new flick coming out with "Spring Breakers," and after her split with Biebs. it's clear she's looking to reinvent herself a little. So long, teenybopper singer-this Selena's got chops to spare.
